It’s the Process: A Bibliography

Amy. (2013). On process art for preschoolers [Blog post]. Retrieved from http://showmelibrarian.blogspot.com/2013/09/on-process-art-for-preschoolers.html

Bongiorno, L. (2014). How process art experiences support preschoolers. Teaching Young Children, 7(3), 18-19. http://www.naeyc.org/tyc/files/tyc/Bongiorno.pdf

Burnett, C. (2012). Time to create: Hands-on explorations in process art for young children. Lewisville, NC: Gryphon House.

Chakraborty, B., & Stone, S. (2011). Process art vs. product art: the teacher's dilemma. Childhood Education, 87(3), S7-8.

Clement, D. (2012). Children’s art: process versus product [Blog post]. Retrieved from http://www.prekandksharing.blogspot.com/2012/02/childrens-art-process-versus-product.html

Doorley, R. (2014). Tinkerlab: A hands on guide for little inventors. Boston, MA: Roost Books

Hardy, K. (n.d.) Children’s art: it’s the process, not the product that counts. Retrieved from http://www.thealliance forec.org/library.php?c=1&news=36

Kohl, M. (2010). Enhancing literacy through process art. Retrieved from http://www.brightring.com/enhancing_literacy.html

Kohl, M. (1994). Preschool art: It’s the process, not the product. Mt. Rainier, MD: Gryphon House.

Salo, K. (2013). Process and product art in storytime [Blog post]. Retrieved from http://www.alsc.ala.org/blog/2013/02/process-product-art-in-storytime/

Stewart, D. (2012). Making the transition from product to process focused art [Blog post]. Retrieved from http://prekandksharing.blogspot.com/2012/02/making-transition-from-product-to.html